28 Act after surgery at the Syracuse Veteran's Administration Medical Center

1 (“VA”) rendered him quadriplegic. After the liability portion of a bifurcated 2 bench trial, the district court found the VA liable for Malmberg’s injuries.
3 Malmberg v. United States, 814 F. Supp. 2d 159, 167 (N.D.N.Y. 2011). The 4 government does not appeal the district court’s finding of liability.

5 Malmberg appeals from the August 21, 2014 judgment of the United States
6 District Court for the Northern District of New York (Scullin, J.) awarding him
7 damages of $4,468,859.91. Malmberg v. United States, No. 5:06-cv-1042 (FJS/TWD), 8 2014 WL 4184737, at *15-16 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 21, 2014). Malmberg argues that the 9 district court abused its discretion by (1) offsetting the award for future medical 10 care and benefits by subtracting out for services that could be provided by the 11 VA for free, thus forcing him to receive medical services from his tortfeasor 12 rather than choosing his own medical providers in the future; (2) denying his 13 motion to amend his ad damnum clause to increase the amount of damages he 14 sought; and (3) awarding $2 million in damages for past and future pain and 15 suffering, which he contends is lower than comparable awards from New York
16 state courts for similar injuries. The United States cross-appeals from the district
17 court’s refusal to further offset the award for future medical care to reflect future
18 home health services provided by a third-party contractor paid for by the VA.

11 POOLER, Circuit Judge:

12 Charles Malmberg sued the United States under the Federal Tort Claims 13 Act (“FTCA”) after surgery at the Syracuse Veteran’s Administration Medical 14 Center (“VA”) rendered him quadriplegic. After the liability portion of a 15 bifurcated bench trial, the district court found the VA liable for Malmberg’s 16 injuries. Malmberg v. United States, 814 F. Supp. 2d 159, 167 (N.D.N.Y. 2011). The 17 government does not appeal the district court’s finding of liability.

18 Malmberg appeals from the August 21, 2014 judgment of the United States
19 District Court for the Northern District of New York (Scullin, J.) awarding him
20 damages of $4,468,859.91. Malmberg v. United States, No. 5:06-cv-1042 (FJS/TWD), 21 2014 WL 4184737, at *15-16 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 21, 2014). Malmberg argues that the 22 district court abused its discretion by (1) offsetting the award for future medical 23 care and benefits by subtracting out for services that could be provided by the

1 VA for free, thus forcing him to receive medical services from his tortfeasor 2 rather than choosing his own medical providers in the future; (2) denying his 3 motion to amend his ad damnum clause to increase the amount of damages he 4 sought; and (3) awarding $2 million in damages for past and future pain and 5 suffering, which he contends is lower than comparable awards from New York
6 state courts for similar injuries. The United States cross-appeals from the district
7 court's refusal to further offset the award for future medical care to reflect future
8 home health services provided by a third-party contractor paid for by the VA.

9 We vacate the district court's decision insofar as it offset the award for 10 future medical care and supplies. Federal law does not require that a veteran 11 injured as a result of the VA's malpractice be forced to continue under VA care 12 for lack of financial resources and be subject to a concomitant offset, and New 13 York state law does not warrant such an offset. In addition, we hold that the 14 district court failed to provide adequate analysis to support both its denial of 15 Malmberg's motion to amend his ad damnum clause and its decision to set the 16 award for past and future pain and suffering at $2 million, and we remand with 17 directions that the district court consider anew Malmberg's motion to increase 18 the ad damnum, taking into account the testimony of Dr. David Hunsinger, and

1 determine damages without an offset for future receipt of medical care and 2 supplies from the VA, consistent with this opinion. Finally, we affirm the district 3 court's decision not to further offset the award for future home health services on 4 the ground that the provision of such services going forward is not reasonably 5 certain.

6 BACKGROUND

7 Prior to the operation at issue, Malmberg suffered from symptoms 8 primarily in his left arm – weakness, numbness and tingling. He did not 9 demonstrate any symptoms typically associated with spinal cord compression.
10 On November 4, 2004, Malmberg underwent surgery at the VA to remove a 11 degenerative disc and osteophytes (bony outgrowths usually associated with 12 cartilage degeneration). When he awoke from anesthesia, Malmberg complained 13 that his legs were weak. X-rays and an MRI revealed that he suffered from mild 14 cord impingement at several points in his spine, with excessive edema in the 15 spinal cord. He was diagnosed with incomplete quadriplegia.

16 Persons wishing to sue the federal government for money damages for 17 personal injury must do so pursuant to the FTCA, which requires putative 18 plaintiffs to first file an administrative claim. 28 U.S.C. § 2675(a). Malmberg filed

1 his administrative claim in January 2006. The VA effectively denied the claim by 2 failing to act on it within six months. Id. (“The failure of an agency to make final 3 disposition of a claim within six months after it is filed shall, at the option of the 4 claimant any time thereafter, be deemed a final denial of the claim for purposes 5 of this section.”). In August 2006, Malmberg sued the United States for the 6 injuries he sustained. The district court bifurcated the trial at Malmberg’s 7 request, and found the VA liable for Malmberg’s injuries after the first portion of 8 the trial. Malmberg v. United States, 814 F. Supp. 2d 159 (N.D.N.Y. 2011).

9 In December 2012, the district court held a bench trial to set the amount of 10 damages. The plaintiff’s evidence indicated that before the November 2004 11 surgery, Malmberg lived independently, although he was not employed because 12 of the radiculopathy. He testified that prior to the surgery, he enjoyed an array 13 of activities, socialized regularly and did not have problems with his legs, right 14 arm, bladder or bowel. Post-surgery, Malmberg has no use of his legs, cannot 15 stand, and is confined to a wheelchair for the rest of his life. He must now use a 16 catheter, which needs to be inserted up to 15 times a day, gets repeated urinary 17 tract infections and lacks control over his bowels. Malmberg testified that he 18 suffers from pain daily, ranging from a 7-to-10 on a 1-to-10 scale. As his

1 condition is not expected to improve, and will likely worsen, he will need 2 assistance with daily living tasks for the rest of his life.

3 The district court ultimately awarded Malmberg $500,000 for past pain and 4 suffering, $1.5 million for future pain and suffering, and $2,469,859.91 in 5 economic damages. The district court offset the economic damages award for 6 future medical care by subtracting out for medical care and supplies that would 7 be provided for free by the VA. The district court declined to offset the award 8 for the costs of home health services provided by third-party contractors but paid 9 for by the VA. Finally, the district court denied Malmberg's renewed motion to 10 increase his ad damnum clause. This appeal followed.

11 DISCUSSION

12 Following a bench trial, we review the factual findings of the district court 13 for clear error and its legal conclusions de novo. Petereit v. S.B. Thomas, Inc., 63 14 F.3d 1169, 1176 (2d Cir. 1995).

15 I. Offset for medical care and supplies to be provided by the VA.

16 The district court offset Malmberg's economic damages award by both the 17 amount of past services provided by the VA, as well as the cost of future services 18 that the VA will continue to provide free of charge. The district court found that

1 the government should not be forced to pay for services that the VA could 2 provide for free, although it is not clear whether it relied on federal or state law
3 in reaching its conclusion. Because of this, and because the government argues 4 that such an offset is required by both federal and state law, we address each.

5 As he did below, Malmberg concedes that the offset for past medical 6 services he received is proper. However, Malmberg challenges the district 7 court's offset against the award for future medical services, arguing such an 8 offset is not required under either federal or state law, and that he should not be 9 forced by financial constraints to receive medical care from the tortfeasor 10 responsible for his injuries. Whether such an offset against an award for future 11 medical costs is required in our Circuit is an open issue. There are competing 12 rationales militating for and against such an offset. On the one hand, as the 13 government reminds us, it is axiomatic that the government does not "pay twice 14 for the same injury." Brooks v. United States, 337 U.S. 49, 53 (1949). On the other 15 hand, it is, as this Court has recognized, particularly unseemly to force a plaintiff 16 to receive medical services from the tortfeasor responsible for his injuries. Ulrich 17 v. Veterans Admin. Hosp., 853 F.2d 1078, 1084 (2d Cir. 1988).

1        Ulrich also involved a veteran who suffered an injury as a result of 2 malpractice while being treated at a Veteran's Administration medical center.
3 There, the district court refused—without explanation-- to award future medical 4 damages. In urging reversal, the appellant argued that he was denied future 5 medical expenses "in part because the trial court believed the VA will provide 6 him with free medical care in the future." Id. Unable to discern from the record 7 the reason for the district court's decision to withhold such an award, the Ulrich 8 court remanded with directions:

9            It should be pointed out that any award for future
10 medical expenses should not be limited on the ground 11 that, as a veteran, plaintiff is entitled to free VA medical 12 care, hospitalization, and institutionalization. He is not 13 obligated to seek medical care from the party whose 14 negligence created his need for such care simply 15 because that party offers it without charge. Moreover, it 16 is not relevant that Ulrich has sought treatment from 17 VA hospitals in the past. He has a right to select a 18 doctor or private hospital of his own choice for his 19 future medical needs. Thus, the district court's failure 20 to award future medical expenses was erroneous if and 21 to the extent it relied on the premise that the VA will 22 provide plaintiff free care in the future. That this might 23 result in a windfall for him is a matter for Congress, not 24 the courts.

26 Id. at 1084 (internal citations omitted).

1       The government, viewing the language in Ulrich as dicta, urges reliance on 2   a later case, Morgan v. United States, 968 F.2d 200 (2d Cir. 1992). In Morgan, the 3   plaintiff was also a veteran awarded damages after he sought to recover under 4   the FTCA for injuries as a result of medical malpractice at a VA hospital. This 5   Court held that the damages award must be reduced by any amount awarded to 6   the plaintiff under 38 U.S.C. § 351 (now 38 U.S.C. § 1151), which requires the 7   government to make certain disability benefits payments to veterans injured 8   through the fault of the VA. Id. at 201-02. The Morgan court so held because 9   Section 351 required that when a veteran received a judgment as the result of 10   such a disability, disability payments made pursuant to Section 351 were to be 11   withheld “until the aggregate amount of benefits which would be paid but for 12   this sentence equals the total amount included in such judgment, settlement, or 13   compromise.” 968 F.2d at 205 (quoting 38 U.S.C. § 351). The issue in Morgan was 14   “whether the phrase ‘total amount included in such judgment’ was intended, as 15   the government argue[d], to encompass the total amount of any FTCA award to 16   a veteran for injuries resulting from VA medical treatment or was intended 17   instead, as plaintiffs argue[d], to refer only to that portion of such an FTCA 18   award which represents the veteran's lost earnings.” Id. at 205. The Court

1 concluded “that ‘total amount’ means the total, not merely the lost earnings 2 component.” Id. In so doing, it relied on the express language of the statute, 3 coupled with legislative history for Section 351 “stat[ing] that the goal of the 4 setoff provision was ‘to preclude duplicate recoveries for the same disability or 5 death.’” Id. at 207. The government argues that Morgan requires an offset here, 6 because allowing an award for future medical care that could be provided by the 7 Veteran’s Administration represents a potential duplicate recovery.

8       However, Morgan is distinguishable. Morgan addressed only the scope of 9 the statutorily required setoff for Section 1151 (then Section 351) benefits. Section 10 1151 disability benefits are a separate category of benefits, provided only to 11 veterans injured as a result of care provided by the Veteran’s Administration, 12 from the medical care provided to all veterans by virtue of their service to the 13 United States, which is provided for in 38 U.S.C. § 1710. The statutory language 14 and legislative history of Section 1151 both express a clear desire by Congress to 15 limit duplicative recoveries. This desire makes sense, given that Section 1151 16 disability benefits are an administrative remedy for veterans injured or killed 17 while receiving care at Veteran’s Administration hospitals, and a recovery under 18 the FTCA is essentially the same remedy. Absent from the language and

1 legislative history for Section 1710 is the language prohibiting duplicative
2 recoveries found in Section 1151. It is one thing to require an offset for benefits 3 that are meant to provide an alternative to tort damages, and another thing 4 entirely to require an offset that would force a veteran to continue to receive 5 medical care from his tortfeasor.

6 Nor do we find support for the government's position in Brooks v. United 7 States, 337 U.S. 49 (1949). There, the Supreme Court considered whether service 8 members, who may not sue the United States for injuries received during their 9 service, may sue for "injuries not incident to their service." Id. at 50. Answering 10 in the affirmative, the Court remanded the case to the Fourth Circuit to consider, 11 in the first instance, whether an offset should be taken for past medical care or 12 disability benefits, noting that its holding:

13 does not mean that the amount payable under 14 servicemen's benefit laws should not be deducted, or 15 taken into consideration, when the serviceman obtains 16 judgment under the Tort Claims Act. Without the 17 benefit of argument in this Court, or discussion of the 18 matter in the Court of Appeals, we now see no
19 indication that Congress meant the United States to pay 20 twice for the same injury. Certain elements of tort 21 damages may be the equivalent of elements taken into 22 account in providing disability payments. It would 23 seem incongruous, at first glance, if the United States

1           should have to pay in tort for hospital expenses it had 2           already paid, for example.

3
4   Id. at 53-54. On remand, the Fourth Circuit held that it was proper to offset any 5   award for “hospital or medical expenses which the government has paid or on 6   account of loss of earning power for the period for which he has drawn army 7   pay. It seems equally clear that the award should be diminished by the amount 8   which he has received or is to receive from the government by way of disability 9   benefits.” United States v. Brooks, 176 F.2d 482, 484 (4th Cir. 1949). The Fourth 10   Circuit made no mention of an offset for future medical costs.

11           The Seventh Circuit examined the Supreme Court’s decision in Brooks in 12   Molzof v. United States, 6 F.3d 461, 466 (7th Cir. 1993). There, plaintiff was injured 13   as a result of medical malpractice at a VA hospital, suffering irreversible brain 14   damage that required continued hospitalization. Id. at 463. The district court, 15   relying on Brooks, found that requiring the government to pay for care that the 16   VA could provide for free would constitute “punitive damages,” which are 17   barred by the FTCA. Id. The Seventh Circuit affirmed, but the Supreme Court 18   reversed, concluding that the FTCA “bars the recovery only of what are legally 19   considered ‘punitive damages’ under traditional common-law principles.”

1 Molzof v. United States, 502 U.S. 301, 312 (1992). On remand, the Seventh Circuit 2 found:

3 Brooks is not controlling. In the present case, the 4 Supreme Court decided, at least implicitly, that nothing
5 under the FTCA or other provision of federal law
6 prohibited the government from paying twice for future
7 medical expenses. The Court concluded that awarding 8 future expenses in the light of free care was not 9 punitive. Whether such an award is permissible, the 10 Court indicated, was a matter of state law. Thus, the 11 issue with which we are confronted on remand is not 12 what Congress intended, but rather whether state law, in 13 particular, Wisconsin law, permits double payment.

14
15 6 F.3d at 464 (internal citation omitted).

16 We agree, and hold that federal law does not require an offset against a 17 veteran's damages award for future medical care that could be provided at a VA 18 facility. Federal law disfavors an outcome whereby a litigant is "obligated to 19 seek medical care from the party whose negligence created his need for such care 20 simply because that party offers it without charge." Ulrich, 853 F.2d at 1084. See 21 also Feeley v. United States, 337 F.2d 924, 934–35 (3d Cir. 1964) (same). As aptly 22 stated by the Third Circuit:

23 A victim of another's tort is entitled, we think, to 24 choose, within reasonable limits, his own doctor and 25 place of confinement, if such care is necessary. To force

1 a plaintiff to choose between accepting public aid or 2 bearing the expense of rehabilitation himself is an 3 unreasonable choice. The plaintiff may not be satisfied 4 with the public facilities; he may feel that a particular 5 private physician is superior; in the future because of 6 over-crowded conditions he may not even be able to 7 receive timely care. These are only a few of many 8 considerations with which an individual may be faced 9 in selecting treatment. The plaintiff's past use of the 10 government facilities does not ensure his future use of 11 them. He will now have the funds available to him to 12 enable him to seek private care. He should not be 13 denied this opportunity.

14
15 Feeley, 337 F.2d at 935.

16 Our analysis, however, does not end there. Damages in FTCA actions are 17 determined by the law of the state in which the tort occurred, Ulrich, 853 F.2d at 18 1081-82, so even if federal law does not require an offset we must next consider 19 whether such an offset is warranted under state law. In New York, collateral 20 source payments are governed by N.Y. CPLR § 4545, which, at the time 21 Malmberg commenced the instant suit, provided in relevant part that:

22 In any action brought to recover damages for personal 23 injury . . . where the plaintiff seeks to recover for the 24 cost of medical care, dental care, custodial care or 25 rehabilitation services, loss of earnings or other 26 economic loss, evidence shall be admissible for 27 consideration by the court to establish that any such 28 past or future cost or expense was or will, with reasonable certainty, be replaced or indemnified, in whole or in part, from any collateral source such as insurance (except for life insurance), social security (except those benefits provided under title XVIII of the social security act), workers' compensation or employee benefit programs (except such collateral sources entitled by law to liens against any recover of the plaintiff). If the court finds that any such cost or expense was or will, with reasonable certainty, be replaced or indemnified from any collateral source, it shall reduce the amount of the award by such finding, minus an amount equal to the premiums paid by the plaintiff for such benefits for the two-year period immediately preceding the accrual of such action and minus an amount equal to the projected future cost to the plaintiff of maintaining such benefits.

At common law, a plaintiff's award for economic damages such as medical costs was not offset by payments from collateral sources such as insurance. Oden v. Chemung Cty. Indus. Dev. Agency, 87 N.Y.2d 81, 85-86 (1995). The traditional rule was "based on the premise that a negligent defendant should not, in fairness, be permitted to reduce its liability by the proceeds of insurance or some other source to which that defendant has not contributed." Id. at 85. The common-law rule was abrogated by statute, and as Section 4545(c) "is a statute <sup>2</sup> Section 4545(c) was amended in November of 2009 and redesignated as section 4545(a), but the amendment does not apply to this case, which was commenced in 2006. See 2009 Sess. Laws News of N.Y. Ch. 494, pt. F, §§ 2, 9 (S. 66002) (McKinney's).

1 enacted in derogation of the common law . . . it is to be strictly construed . . . in 2 the narrowest sense that its words and underlying purposes permit.” Id. at 85.

3 Section 4545 is silent as to the issue before us: whether an injured plaintiff 4 is subject to an offset because he is entitled to receive services from a tortfeasor 5 responsible for his injuries. The parties do not cite, and we have not found, any 6 cases dealing with the applicability of Section 4545 to medical services provided 7 by the Veteran’s Administration.

8 The plain language of Section 4545, however, suggests that a tortfeasor’s 9 offer to provide a plaintiff with free medical services at the tortfeasor’s facility 10 does not warrant an offset against the damages award. Section 4545 provides for 11 a reduction of the damages award with respect to costs of medical care “[i]f the 12 court finds that any such cost or expense was or will, with reasonable certainty, 13 be replaced or indemnified from any collateral source.” If the plaintiff seeks 14 medical care from a non-VA provider—which, as discussed, is his prerogative—15 the costs of that medical care cannot be regarded as “replaced or indemnified” 16 merely because the plaintiff elected not to accept the opportunity to receive free 17 medical care from the VA. Indeed, the government has not demonstrated that,

1 under these circumstances, plaintiff's future medical care costs "will, with 2 reasonable certainty, be replaced or indemnified from any collateral source."

3 Moreover, in an analogous context, several New York trial courts have 4 declined to offset awards intended to provide plaintiffs with medical services in 5 the future, in part because such an offset would deprive plaintiffs of the ability to 6 choose their own medical services caregiver. In Andrialis v. Snyder, an infant 7 injured as a result of the defendants' medical malpractice was awarded damages 8 to provide for future medical services, including physical, occupational and 9 speech therapy. 603 N.Y.S.2d 670 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. N.Y. Cty. 1993). Defendants 10 sought an offset pursuant to Section 4545 on the ground that "the infant plaintiff 11 would be eligible under certain circumstances to receive physical therapy, 12 occupational therapy, speech therapy and psychotherapy" provided for free 13 from her school district. Id. The trial court declined to offset the damages on the 14 grounds that the provision of such services by the state was not reasonably 15 certain, noting that such an offset would mean that:

16 the parents could not select the therapist. The infant 17 plaintiff would be treated only by those practitioners
18 approved by the Board of Education and the State
19 Education Department who would be paid a 20 contractual rate arrived at by competitive bidding.

1
2 Id. The Andrialis court further observed that:

3           A distinction can be made between insurance policies or 4           statutes that provide payment for medical services by 5           practitioners or institutions selected by the patient and a 6           statute which may provide services by practitioners or 7           institutions selected by a government agency. Should a 8           plaintiff who may be entitled to medical services 9           without charge at a Veteran's Administration facility be 10          precluded from recovering for future medical or 11          hospital expenses?

13 Id. See also, e.g., Giventer ex rel. Giventer v. Rementeria, 705 N.Y.S.2d 863 (N.Y. Sup.
14 Ct. Rich. Cty. 2000) ("The jury's awards will permit Evan and his parents to 15 obtain the care that they choose, from doctors and nurses of their choice, without 16 any limitations such as pre-approval or being on a list for treatment or any other 17 constraints which accompany managed care. An HMO would not replace what 18 the jury awarded and cannot give rise to a collateral source offset."); Ventura v.
19 Fisher, 798 N.Y.S.2d 714 (N.Y. Civ. Ct. Kings Cty. 2004) (same) (collecting cases).

20          The Second Department expressed a similar reluctance to cabin future 21 treatment choices in the context of considering whether Section 4545 required an 22 offset where the plaintiff's health insurance coverage flowed through her 23 husband's employer. Kihl v. Pfeffer, 848 N.Y.S.2d 200 (2d Dep't 2007). In 1 considering whether it was “reasonably certain” the insurance coverage would 2 be available in the future, the Appellate Division noted that her “receipt of future 3 collateral source benefits is not within her own control, but rather, is wholly 4 dependent upon the continued employment of her husband.” Id. While Section 5 4545 aimed to prevent “double recoveries,” it was “not meant to enslave a health 6 care beneficiary to a particular employer or insurance provider.” Id. Taking into 7 account that concern, along with other factors, the Second Department affirmed 8 the trial court’s decision not to offset, noting that “[i]n many cases, no one factor, 9 standing alone, will necessarily support the grant or denial of collateral source 10 reductions.” Id. Instead, “[e]ach case involving potential future collateral source 11 reductions to awards for economic loss must be judged on its own unique facts 12 and merits.” Id.

13       Based on the plain language of Section 4545, and the “unique facts and 14 merits” presented here, we vacate the district court’s decision insofar as it offset 15 Malmberg’s award for future medical services and supplies that could be 16 provided by the VA for free. There is, as the Andrialis court noted, a difference 17 between insurance policies that allow patients to select their own providers and 18 reimburse payments for those services, and programs that allow government

1 agencies to select medical providers for the patients. Malmberg should not be 2 forced by virtue of his finances to continue to accept medical care from the 3 tortfeasor responsible for his injuries. See also Molzof, 6 F.3d at 468 (“[W]e share 4 the reluctance of other courts addressing this issue to deny the plaintiff the 5 freedom to choose his medical provider and, in effect, to compel him to undergo 6 treatment from his tortfeasor.”).

7 Finally, we find that Malmberg’s satisfaction—or lack thereof—with the 8 care being provided by the VA is simply not relevant to the analysis of whether 9 there should be an offset for future medical services.<sup>3</sup> We recognize, as other 10 courts have, that there is some risk of a double recovery to the extent Malmberg 11 elects to continue receiving services from the VA, but any such concern is for 12 Congress and not this Court. See Ulrich, 853 F.2d at 1084; Feeley, 337 F.2d at 935.

13 As we find that the district court improperly offset Malmberg’s damages 14 award to the extent that it offset for future medical services and supplies that

<sup>3</sup> The district court relied on testimony from Malmberg’s treating physician to support its conclusion that Malmberg was satisfied with his care at the VA:

Q: Yes, sir, are you aware of that, that Mr. Malmberg is satisfied with the care and treatment he's receiving from Dr. Thompson?

A: He has expressed that it is helpful to him.

Malberg, 2014 WL 4184737, at *7. The district court did not address Malmberg’s testimony that if he had the financial means to do so, he would seek treatment elsewhere.

1 could be provided by the VA for free, we need not reach Malmberg's arguments 2 that either (1) the government waived its right to an offset by not seeking one 3 until after Malmberg rested in the damages trial; or (2) that the district court 4 abused its discretion in accepting a late expert report from the government 5 raising the issue for the first time. On remand, the district court shall adjust its 6 damages calculations to no longer offset for the costs of future medical services 7 and supplies. In addition, both parties have noted certain mathematical errors in 8 the district court's final damages award, which the district court should correct 9 on remand.

10 II. The ad damnum clause.

11 Before filing a personal injury lawsuit, the FTCA requires a plaintiff to first 12 file an administrative claim with the appropriate federal agency. 28 U.S.C. § 13 2675(a). If the federal agency denies the claim, a plaintiff may bring such a 14 lawsuit in federal court, but the damages sought in such a lawsuit may not 15 exceed the amount sought in the administrative claim:

16 Action under this section shall not be instituted for any 17 sum in excess of the amount of the claim presented to 18 the federal agency, except where the increased amount 19 is based upon newly discovered evidence not 20 reasonably discoverable at the time of presenting the

1 claim to the federal agency, or upon allegation and 2 proof of intervening facts, relating to the amount of the 3 claim.

4
5 28 U.S.C. § 2675(b).

6 “The FTCA, as a statute waiving sovereign immunity, must be complied 7 with strictly.” O’Rourke v. E. Air Lines, Inc., 730 F.2d 842, 856 (2d Cir. 1984), 8 abrogated on other grounds by Salve Regina Coll. v. Russell, 499 U.S. 225 (1991). To 9 recover damages in excess of the amount set forth in the administrative claim, 10 then, one of the two exceptions set forth in the statute must apply: “the increased 11 amount is based upon newly discovered evidence not reasonably discoverable at 12 the time of presenting the claim to the federal agency,” or there is “proof of 13 intervening facts, relating to the amount of the claim.” 28 U.S.C. § 2675(b). The 14 plaintiff bears the burden of demonstrating that one of the exceptions applies.
15 Cf. O’Rourke, 730 F.2d at 856. We review a district court’s finding regarding 16 “newly discovered evidence” and “intervening facts” for clear error. See, e.g., 17 Zurba v. United States, 318 F.3d 736, 739 (7th Cir. 2003).

18 Malmberg sought damages of $6,000,000 when he filed his administrative 19 claim, and requested that amount in his ad damnum when he eventually filed 20 suit. In July 2012, he moved to increase the ad damnum to $15,000,000. Shortly

1 thereafter, he sought to amend that motion, seeking to further increase the ad 2 damnum to $25,000,000. Malmberg argued that an increased ad damnum was 3 necessary because (1) when he filed his administrative claim in 2006, the full 4 extent of his injuries and their lasting effect were not known and were 5 unforeseeable; and (2) between 2006 and 2012, New York courts in four cases 6 increased the amounts awarded for pain and suffering for similar injuries to 7 between $10,000,000 and $35,000,000, and this evolution of the law was 8 unforeseeable.

9 The district court denied the motion in October 2012, finding that while 10 Malmberg's

11 condition has deteriorated, and arguably has 12 deteriorated significantly, since the time he filed his 13 administrative claim in January 2006, Plaintiff has failed 14 to point to any evidence in the record to demonstrate 15 that this deterioration is anything more than the wors[t] 16 case scenario for the injuries he suffered as a result of 17 Defendant's negligence. Moreover, he has failed to 18 demonstrate that this wors[t] case scenario was not 19 reasonably foreseeable at the time that he filed his 20 administrative claim. In fact, in his administrative 21 claim, he stated that "the care [he received] prior, 22 during and after surgery was rendered negligently ...
23 [and that] [a]s a result of this negligent treatment [he 24 was] left with paralysis involving all extremities."
25

1 Malmberg v. United States, No. 5:06-cv-1042 (FJS/TWD), 2012 WL 4953091, at *2
2 (N.D.N.Y. Oct. 15, 2012) (alteration omitted).

3       The district court's finding based on the record before it in 2012 is not 4 clearly erroneous. In O'Rourke, we observed that "other courts that have ruled 5 on the scope of [section 2675(b)] have granted motions to amend ad damnum
6 clauses only when an unexpected change occurred either in the law or in a 7 medical diagnosis." O'Rourke, 730 F.2d at 856. Here, the district court found that 8 Malmberg failed to demonstrate that the evidence he presented to support that 9 motion was "either material or newly discovered evidence that he could not have 10 reasonably discovered prior to filing his administrative complaint." Malmberg, 11 2012 WL 4953091, at *6. In light of the record evidence of Malmberg's extensive 12 injuries at the time he filed his 2006 administrative claim, this finding is not 13 clearly erroneous.

14       However, when Malmberg again moved to increase the ad damnum in 15 May 2013, after the bench trial on damages, the record was materially different.
16 During the trial, Dr. David Hunsinger, Malmberg's treating physician at the VA, 17 testified that the extent of Malmberg's deterioration was not foreseeable in 2006:

1 Q: Okay. In this case Mr. Malmberg filed a claim, 2 this claim in 2006, and I just want to ask you, and I'll 3 take you in particular, in 2006, as far as you were 4 concerned, was it reasonably foreseeable that you 5 would be able to predict the deterioration that he has 6 today in his medical status?

7
8 A: No.

9 App'x at 618-19.

10 In denying the renewed motion to increase the ad damnum, the district 11 court found that "[t]here is no evidence from the record, specifically in reviewing 12 the transcript of the damages trial, that Plaintiff should be able to change the 13 specific amount of damages he claims." Malmberg, 2014 WL 4184737, at *15.
14 Because it is not clear from the above statement whether the district court 15 overlooked Hunsinger's testimony, or considered and rejected the testimony, we 16 vacate the denial and remand with instructions that the district court consider 17 the motion to increase the ad damnum anew, taking into account Hunsinger's 18 testimony.

19 III. The award for pain and suffering.

20 We review a district court's finding of facts in support of its FTCA 21 damages award for clear error, Presley v. United States Postal Serv., 317 F.3d 167, 22 174 (2d Cir. 2003), but we review the nature and measure of its FTCA damages award according to the law of the state in which the tort occurred, see, e.g., Bravo v. United States, 532 F.3d 1154, 1160-61 (11th Cir. 2008); Davis v. United States, 375 F.3d 590, 591 (7th Cir. 2004).

In determining Malmberg's award for pain and suffering, the district court set forth the injuries suffered by Malmberg as a result of the VA's malpractice, to wit:

1. He has lost the ability to stand, walk, or use his legs.
2. He has very limited use of his hands, and what he has is diminishing as time passes.
3. He suffers from daily uncontrollable spasms in which his legs uncontrollably bounce around.
4. He has incontinence of urine requiring multiple self-catheterizations daily causing spillage of urine, periodic urinary tract infections, and repeated so[i]ling of his clothes and bedding.
5. He has bowel incontinence resulting in accidents in which he soils his clothes and bedding.
6. He has had significant long-standing decubitus ulcers which he will be at risk for all of his life.
7. He has frequent bouts or episodes of constipation and diarrhea and abdominal pain.
8. He has significant daily physical pain requiring daily pain medications to help partially control his pain.
9. The medications he takes affect his ability to concentrate and impact his ability to remain alert.
10. He has loss of sexual function.
11. He has significant psychological issues because of all of his physical disabilities. Psychological problems include frequent nightmares, constant fear of having

1 “accidents” concerning his bladder and his bowel 2 resulting in his being fearful of leaving his home, being 3 fearful of getting fat and not being able to operate his 4 wheelchair, even though as the Court knows, he has 5 been unable to eat as any normal person would do, 6 being consumed by his disabilities, and ongoing 7 depression.

8 12. He has lost his independence and must rely on 9 others for many of the most basic needs.

10 13. He has difficulty maneuvering his wheelchair even 11 in his own home and is forced to deal with accessibility 12 problems on a daily basis.

13 14. He has to face the daily multiple issues that a 14 catastrophically injured person experiences that able-15 bodied individuals often do not appreciate and ignore.
16

17 Malmberg, 2014 WL 4184737 at *12. Neither party challenges these findings of 18 fact.

19 The district court then provided the following explanation for its pain and 20 suffering award:

21 As evidenced above, the significant changes to 22 Plaintiff's life are severe and real. They are not, in any 23 sense, mere speculation. Unequivocally, Plaintiff's 24 injuries are permanent, devastating, and catastrophic.
25 The range in New York is normally between $500,000
26 and $1,500,000 dollars for a pain and suffering award.
27 Therefore, the Court will award Plaintiff $500,000 for 28 past pain and suffering and $1,500,000 for future pain 29 and suffering.

30 Id.

1        This sparse analysis by the district court provides little on which we may 2        base our review, and thus fails as a matter of law. See Arpin v. United States, 521 3        F.3d 769, 776 (7th Cir. 2008) (noting that when a district court determines the 4        amount of damages following a bench trial, “the judge must indicate the 5        reasoning process that connects the evidence to the conclusion” (internal 6        quotation marks omitted)).

7        Acknowledging that “personal injury awards, especially those for pain and 8        suffering, are subjective opinions which are formulated without the availability, 9        or guidance, of precise mathematical quantification,” Reed v. City of New York, 757 10       N.Y.S.2d 244, 248 (1st Dep’t 2003), here, the district court failed to provide 11       sufficient rationale for its award. It did not, for example, point to a single case or 12       jury award to support its conclusion that the range in New York for pain and 13       suffering awards for plaintiffs who suffered permanent and catastrophic 14       injuries “is normally between $500,000 and $1.5 million.” Indeed, the 15       only quadriplegia cases it cited appear in a footnote, and each provides for a far 16       greater recovery than the district court awarded here. Malmberg, 2014 WL 17       4184737 at *10 n.15 (citing Saladino v. Stewart & Stevenson Servs., Inc., No. 01 Civ.
18       7644(SLT), 2011 WL 284476, at *11 (E.D.N.Y. Jan. 26, 2011), aff’d, 500 F. App’x 69

1 (2d Cir. 2012) ($15 million award did not deviate materially from reasonable 2 compensation); Barnhard v. Cybex Int'l, Inc., 864 N.Y.S.2d 378 (4th Dep't 2008) 3 (award of $3 million for past pain and suffering and $9 million for future pain 4 and suffering); McMillan v. City of New York, Nos. 03–CV–6049, 08–CV–2887, 2008 5 WL 4287573 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 19, 2008) (award of $4 million for past pain and 6 suffering and $7.5 million for future pain and suffering)).

7 Absent further analysis and clearer reasoning by the district court, we 8 cannot make a fair determination about whether the pain and suffering award is 9 inadequate. We thus vacate the award of damages for past and future pain and 10 suffering. Because we do not decide at this time the adequacy of the award, we 11 need not decide the appropriate standard of review applicable for a district 12 court's FTCA damages award where the nature and measure of damages is 13 governed by New York law. The district court is free, on remand, to set damages 14 as it sees fit, but it must explain its rationale.

15 IV. The cross-appeal.

16 In its cross-appeal, the United States argues that the district court abused 17 its discretion by failing to make an offset for VA-provided home health services.
18 We disagree. Section 4545(c) requires that a defendant prove that future costs

1 “will, with reasonable certainty, be replaced or indemnified, in whole or in part, 2 from any collateral source.” “Reasonable certainty” means that “the court must 3 find that the plaintiff is legally entitled to the continued receipt of such collateral 4 source, pursuant to a contract or otherwise enforceable agreement, subject only 5 to the continued payment of a premium and such other financial obligations as 6 may be required by such agreement.” C.P.L.R. § 4545(c) (now codified at 7 C.P.L.R. § 4545(a)).

8 We agree with the district court that the government failed to demonstrate, 9 with reasonable certainty, that the home health services would continue to be 10 funded by the VA. While Malmberg’s court-endorsed life care plan calls for 21
11 hours per week of such services until Malmberg reaches the age of 62, and 18 12 hours daily thereafter, the government admits that the VA’s standard policy 13 provides only 14 hours a week of care. The record reflects that, to the extent 14 Malmberg requires more than 14 hours of weekly care, he must obtain multiple, 15 contingent approvals, including periodic submissions for review. In the absence 16 of evidence demonstrating the requisite “reasonable certainty,” we leave 17 undisturbed the district court’s judgment on this issue.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons given above, the decision of the district court is affirmed in part and vacated in part, and remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.
